Smart Tax Tips for Summer

Summer brings a welcome shift into warmer weather, family plans, and long-awaited vacations. While taxes may be the last thing on anyone's mind, several common summer activities can influence next year's return. A little awareness now can make filing smoother later, so here's a quick look at how summertime choices may affect tax season.

Summer Day Camp

Many families enroll children in day camps during the summer months. These expenses may qualify for the Child and Dependent Care Credit, which can reduce next year's tax bill. Only daytime programs are eligible, so it's helpful to keep receipts and documentation throughout the season.

Marriage

Summer weddings often come with a few important tax-related tasks. Newlyweds should report any name changes to the Social Security Administration to ensure records match. Address changes should also be updated with USPS, employers, and the IRS. Filing Form 8822 ensures the IRS has accurate mailing information and helps avoid delays.

Part-Time / Seasonal Work

Seasonal and part-time workers may not owe federal income tax, but they could still be eligible for a refund, making it worthwhile to file a return. Those earning money through gig work or side hustles should keep careful records. Payments received through apps may generate a Form 1099-K, and that information will need to be included with your tax filing.

Business Travel

Business travel continues throughout the summer, and certain expenses may be deductible when traveling away from home for work. Whether the trip lasts a few days or several weeks, understanding the rules and maintaining detailed documentation can make a meaningful difference at tax time.

Vacations & Digital Asset Sales

Some taxpayers fund summer vacations by selling digital assets. These transactions may generate a Form 1099-DA, so keeping accurate records is essential. Tracking gains, losses, and transaction details now helps prevent surprises during next year's filing season.
